An Australian memorial to Vietnamese boatpeople

Updated Sat Jun 21, 2008 12:14pm AEST

Australia's first memorial to commemorate the Vietnamese refugees who came to Australia after the defeat of the United States and the South Vietnamese government is due to be unveiled

Many refugees, known as boat people, escaped from Vietnam's communist victors in all sorts of ships and boats to try to sail to freedom.

Some of the survivors settled in the Melbourne suburb of Footscray where the new monument commemorates the thousands who died during the journey and honours Australians who helped resettle boat people.

The state of Victoria's Acting Premier, Rob Hulls says it's an inspirational memorial.

"It's a monument that's really a symbol that will continue to preserve and promote the Vietnamese boat people's heritage and culture for generations to come."

He says,"It's a boat design, it's very clever and emotional really and the message is simple: as human beings we are all in the same boat."

Tags: australia

More Australia Stories:

Call for Australia to recognise Fuzzy Wuzzy Angels
Australia mulls new pressure on Zimbabwe
Caltex chief says Australians must use less fuel

Subscribe

Podcasts RSS Feeds Email Alerts

MP3s

Contact Us

Feedback Form

ABC International Radio Australia © 2008 ABC Pr